Greece has enough money to pay all bondholders as well as pensions and salaries until mid-November, finance minister Evangelos Venizelos has said, amid market fears that the country might default in coming weeks.

Greece has enough money to pay all bondholders as well as pensions and salaries until mid-November, finance minister Evangelos Venizelos has said, amid market fears that the country might default in coming weeks.

Greece had previously said it would start running out of money in mid-October if it did not get the next 8 billion euro (Â£6.8 billion) instalment of its 110 billion euro (Â£95 billion) bailout package.
