BRITAIN needs an emergency exit strategy from the European Union to encourage economic recovery and create jobs, a think-tank report will say.

An onslaught of taxes, red-tape and bureaucracy from Brussels threatens to suffocate the UKâ€™s economic growth, claims the business expert who has written the document.

David Cameron should begin talks for Britain to leave the EU within five years, the report insists.

The call comes in a pamphlet from the social policy think-tank Civitas written by Ian Milne, the director of Euro-sceptic group Global Britain.

Mr Milne said: â€œThe feeling is growing we should withdraw from the EU, and rightly so. It is about time our politicians got to grips with exactly what membership means.â€•
