1 b. Whereas, according to the European Court of Justice, the fact that a person has been a member of an organisation which, because of its involvement in terrorist acts, is on the list forming the Annex to Common Position 2001/931/CFSP and that that person has actively supported the armed struggle waged by that organisation does not automatically constitute a serious reason for considering that that person has committed 'a serious non-political crime' or 'acts contrary to the purposes and principles of the United Nations'; on the other hand, where there are serious reasons for considering that a person has committed such a crime or has been guilty of such acts is conditional on an assessment on a case-by-case basis of the specific facts and whether individual responsibility for carrying out those acts can be attributed to the person concerned.

distribution of hate messages and to eradicating them swiftly; distribution of hate messages and to eradicating them swiftly; notes that the internet provides specific challenges given its global and cross border nature, which can create legal gaps and jurisdictional conflicts thus allowing recruiters and those that are radicalised to communicate remotely and easily from all corners of the world with no physical borders, no need to establish a base and no need to seek sanctuary in a particular country; notes that national law enforcement authorities, EUROPOL and the European Cybercrime Centre need the resources and expertise to investigate and combat the often technologically sophisticated, well funded, difficult to detect, and well mobilised online threat posed by terrorists;
